Growing Crisis

The crisis of this nation is the results of false premisses, cultivated from argumentive sophistry of the varied vocabularies of our American writers,

Take for instance the most graved issues of the Nation, they are all violations of the vital principles of our constitutional civic, social, and personal rights of the people, all shrouded in statutes of criminal acts and pnycedures:

Thus we as the American people are confused, and vexed in state in church, and in our social conduct and breedidgs.

Now unless we come to our own home ideals and clean up ourselves we must soon meet our own fatal destiny.

GEORGIA UPRITISNG

This was the most carruible psetents of justice known in hithritian civilization, and there no earthly need of such adown right insurrection when didn't mean to assist the efforts of the administrations for law and order.

It puts the nation to an open sham and creates more disorder among the common masses

—nd if the act don't incite the federal government to eutervans in all mobviolence our fatal destiny is at hand.
